STEWARD SPOTLIGHT: RUBALIT (RUBY) SIERRA

St. Joseph Hospital Surgical Tech Rubalit “Ruby” Sierra is very family oriented.

“I like to hang out with my mom and do family dinners. Every weekend we’re either doing a carne asada or eating together,” says the mom of two kids.

Ruby sees her coworkers as family too. “We’re spending 40 hours at work. I spend more time with them than with my own family.”

In early 2021, Ruby moved to her current department and noticed the hospital was breaking the union contract by sending her coworkers home early when work diminished, or not following seniority.

She became a steward to band together with her coworkers to enforce our union contract. One of her major achievements was helping secure back pay for a coworker who was put in a lead role without the added pay guaranteed by our collective agreement.

“We filed a grievance and she was compensated for working all those hours,” said Ruby, who saw her coworkers’ morale go up. “I was just happy that she felt supported and she got compensated for working really hard.”

Her work as a steward has also earned her the respect of her new manager, who sought Ruby’s help when crafting a new 12-hour work schedule. “My manager has been very good in that she asks me to make sure we’re following the union contract,” she said. “I’ve shown her that all we want is to make sure things are fair.”

And fairness is what she’s always striving for.

“If you see something that’s not right, it’s up to you to speak up. It’s about being fair and equal. If you see something’s not fair, and you don’t speak, you’re just as guilty.”

MEMBER FIGHTS FOR HER PTO AFTER HR MIX UP

Perseverance pays off — literally — for NUHW steward Kari Helgeson, who after six months of applying pressure was able to recover PTO hours she lost due to a mix up that seemed to get worse every time the hospital attempted to resolve the issue.

It all started in November 2021 when Kari, a radiology tech at St. Joseph Hospital, went into medical leave and filed for short-term disability with the State. Kari explicitly asked the hospital and sent a note to her director asking them not to use her PTO.

But 40 hours of her PTO were used, and when she attempted to buy it back before the end of the year to avoid paying tax penalties, “I got the runaround, went through multiple people in HR and payroll,” said Kari.

Another wrinkle came when she applied for the clinical ladder launched last year and received a six percent wage increase.

Kari was then trying to buy her PTO at her old wages, instead of her new pay.

Frustrated by the lack of progress, Kari filed a grievance, but after several meetings the issue was deadlocked.

NUHW put her in touch with an attorney and the problem was heading for arbitration before the hospital caved in and agreed to settle.

Kari was allowed to buy her PTO at her previous wage scale, and also received 14 hours of PTO to make her “whole.”

“If you know you’re right, keep pushing,” she recommends. “They’re going to say – no – as many times as they can. But no doesn’t necessarily mean – no – in this case.”

Another valuable tip: “I have a paper trail a mile long so I could refer to it when I needed it,” Kari noted. “It’s always important to keep an email trail of your correspondence.”
