What happens if I'm injured at work?

If you are injured at work, you must inform your supervisor immediately and ask for proper medical treatment, if needed. You should also inform your steward and/or NUHW representative. If a doctor orders work restrictions, our contract (Assignment of Transitional Duties Rights) states that the employer will give the union three (3) business days' notice with the list of new "light" duties assigned to the injured worker.

If the union objects to the assignment, the company will delay implementation of the proposed assignment for up to five (5) additional business days, during which union representatives will meet with the employer to review and attempt to resolve the union's objections. If no agreement is reached, the company may implement the new assignment and the union may file a grievance or seek arbitration.
